Blessed Among Us Albert Luthuli Zulu Chief, Nobel Laureate (1898-1967)

Albert Luthuli, a member of the Zulu tribe, was raised in a Christian mission reserve in natal, South Africa. Eventually he was elected chief in the village of Grootville, an office that enable him to promote the rights of his poor and oppressed people. To the white-minority government, chiefs were regarded as useful intermediaries in their management and control of the black masses. Luthuli, however, had come to believe the interests of his people could best be served by the overthrow of apartheid. After he joined the African National Congress the government “dismissed” him as chief. This only freed him for a more active role in the antiapartheid struggle, and he became the national leader of the ANC.

As a result of his activities he was repeatedly arrested, “banned”, and confined to house arrest. In 1955 he was arrested, along with the ANC leadership, and charged with high treason. He was eventually freed and helped bring the case against apartheid to the world, and in 1960 he was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize.

Throughout his life, Luthuli held to a deep Christian faith. He disagreed with those activists who dismissed Christianity as the religion of the oppressor. But he challenged the Church to “be with the people, in their lives”. Speaking for himself, he said, “I am in Congress precisely because I am a Christian.”

Albert Luthuli died on July 21, 1967.

“It is inevitable that in working for Freedom some individuals and some families must take the lead and suffer: The Road to Freedom is via the CROSS”. —Albert Luthuli
